

THE TL STACK SENSITIVITY TO NUCLEARITES

M. Aglietta (1), C. Castagnoli (1), K. Iwata (2), Y. Kirihara (3), K. Kuga (4), M. Nakagawa (4), K. Okei (3), O. Saavedra (1), N. Takahashi (5), D. Ukai (4), T. Wada (3), I. Yamamoto (4) and Y. Yamashita (3)

(1) Institute of Cosmo-Geophysics, CNR, Torino, University of Torino and INFN Torino, Italy, (2) Nara Medical University, Nara, Japan, (3) Department of Physics, Okayama University, Okayama 700-8530, Japan, (4) Okayama University of Science, Okayama, Japan, (5) Hirosaki University, Hirosaki, Japan.

It is shown that a thermoluminescent (TL) sheet stack detector, consisting of TL sheets and medical X-ray films, is an effective detector for slow and massive nuclearites. Nuclearite energy loss is not explicitly used for the estimation of the TL stack sensitivity to nuclearites, but implicitly by considering ways of energy depositions.